At Awald Farms we take pride in growing premium quality nursery stock for commercial growers and home gardeners alike. That's why it is with much pleasure that we invite you to log on to our website, awaldfarms.com and download our 2016-2017 catalog during this, our 103rd year in operation. Enclosed, please find our 2016-2017 pricelists, including pricing for volume discount customers. If you have an even larger quantity in mind than what we have listed, feel free to give us a call at 716-337-3162, and we'll be happy to discuss a possibly even lower price with you.

Started in 1914 by E.P. Geiger, (Ed's grandfather) and his sons, the farm has been a labor of love passed down through the generations. We continue to expand our offerings to you, our loyal customers; from red and black raspberries to blackberries, currants and grapevines, you can always expect quality plants, excellent customer service and knowledgeable advice from a family of fourth-generation growers. In addition to our nursery stock we provide premium quality produce to families in our surrounding communities through our U-Pick Farm and Farm Market.

We'd be pleased to show you around our operation if you are ever in our area. Our farm fields are located in and around North Collins and Brant NY, just forty-five minutes south of Buffalo. So take a look through our catalog at awaldfarms.com, and give us a call. We'll be more than happy to speak with you.

Sincerely,

Ed & Millie Awald

CORNELL RELEASES TWO NEW RASPBERRY VARIETIES

Reprinted from an article by Amanda Garris at: <http://news.cornell.edu/stories/2012/04/cornell-releases-two-new-raspberry-varieties>

April 30, 2012 - With its two newest raspberry releases, Big Red is going gold and crimson. Double Gold and Crimson Night offer small-scale growers and home gardeners showy, flavorful raspberries on vigorous, disease-resistant plants.

"Both varieties have attracted a lot of interest from small-scale growers because they are looking for varieties with intense flavor and a different look from the supermarket varieties," said Courtney Weber, Cornell small fruits breeder and associate professor of horticulture. "If consumers get a taste of these, they will buy them."

Double Gold produces a deeply blushed, golden champagne-colored fruit with a distinctive conical shape, earning the "double" in its name for its two harvests per season. The first year of planting, the initial crop is produced in the fall on the tips of that year's canes, and a second crop is produced farther down the same canes the following summer. According to Weber, none of the golden raspberries already on the market combine excellent flavor, peachy blush color, a conical shape and the ability to bear two crops per season.

"I have been told by sellers at farmers markets that having several colors on your display is a good way to draw in customers and distinguish you from other sellers," said Weber. "I'm hoping Double Gold will fit that niche."

In Weber's taste tests, Double Gold has been a favorite. The release is targeted to u-pick growers, farm stands and home gardeners because the fruit is too delicate for long-distance shipping. Although the fruit is tender, the plants that bear them are tough.

Crimson Night produces heavy crops of shiny, dark fruit.

"Over eight years of testing, it has been consistently vigorous and disease-resistant," said Weber. "Specifically, we have observed it to be resistant to Phytophthora root rot as well as most of the common leaf diseases."

Crimson Night caught Weber's eye among thousands of raspberry selections in summer 2003 for its heavy fall crop and dark, shiny fruit. Grown in a commercial high tunnel system that offers protection from the elements, it is vigorous and productive. Grown outdoors without protection, Crimson Night is more compact, making the dark purple canes a particularly attractive ornamental for container gardening or a backyard raspberry plot.

"The berries are medium large with excellent flavor," said Weber. "Although the color is considered too dark for wholesale markets, the shiny, conical fruit are very attractive in a container at a farm stand."

According to Jessica Lyga, plant varieties and germplasm licensing associate for the Cornell Center for Technology Enterprise and Commercialization, both varieties have been licensed to North American Plants, LLC., a propagator that sells to nurseries and growers across the United States. Small quantities will be available late this summer, and North American Plants expects to have enough plants to meet the anticipated demand of each variety by the spring of 2013. Plant patents will be filed later this year.

Double Gold and Crimson Night are the fourth and fifth new berry varieties introduced by Weber in the past year. Recent releases include Purple Wonder, the darkest strawberry variety available; the Herriot strawberry, a high-yielding midseason variety; and the Crimson Giant raspberry, suitable for high tunnel cropping systems with a November harvest. Weber hopes to maintain a steady pace with selections this summer.

"For 2012 there will be approximately 20,000 raspberry seedlings under evaluation, and we will plant about 7,500 more," he said. "We'll also be adding 2,500 more strawberries to the 2,000 already under evaluation."

Interested growers can learn more about new Cornell berry varieties at a strawberry field day in mid-June and two raspberry open house events in July and September.
